Keepa is an Amazon price trend advisor.]]> X240 review: Lenovo's first 'Made in China' ultrabook 19 Feb 2014 12:25:43 +0000 would never guess that this ThinkPad X240, one of the first to be sold by Lenovo in China, is actually assembled in the said country. From the outside, this high-end ultrabook is indistinguishable from any other ThinkPad we have seen before. But there are a few subtle but significant changes. It's made of aluminum The X240 comes in a glossy black finish with a soft-touch gray pattern all over it. It does not come in a shiny finish like you see with most of the other ThinkPads. It's also the first ThinkPad to be made from aluminum; the previous models used magnesium alloy. On one hand, it's not quite as light as the magnesium alloy it is based on; on the other hand, it does not look like the other ThinkPads. It's still a luxury laptop, but not at the same level as the ThinkPad range. There is an excellent build quality To be frank, the ThinkPad X240 is a very solid and well-built laptop. As mentioned, it is made from aluminum. The keyboard and the trackpad are very responsive, especially if you use a ThinkPad on a daily basis. What's interesting is the change in terms of the touchpad. Lenovo's touchpad has always been smooth. But the X240 touchpad has a flat finish, which makes it easier to rub while typing on it. That's not necessarily a good thing, but it's just something to keep in mind. The ThinkPad X240 is water resistant ThinkPads have always been water resistant. But this model is a first in that department. The back of the laptop comes with a label showing that it can handle being submerged in water for up to
